Easter Sunday.

Refulus, My Love.

This place is way ahead of Reno - two hours to be exact, and I know because I've just turned my watch ahead for the second time.

We've just left a fatty enlargement of a town called Kearney and all the town bloods including a few devils were parading the station-way. I know now where the original kick hails from. It's a little more pleasant traveling tho', only these darn praries are sure getting tiresome. Make Omaha tonight and Chicago in the morning - change cars and N.Y. city Tuesday. I have really enjoyed every bit of the way. I'll never send for you!!

Send? I'll come and get you!! Better now - huh!!!?

Haven't skinned up to two pretty girls on board. I'm rather retiring, you know, and any how this is a business trip. Gosh I hate to write on a train. I wouldn't to any one except you.

The trip's half over too. Pretty soon I'll see Denny - then watch my smoke.

I'm making good friends with R. W. Emerson, and like him too.

An revoir, Sweetheart, wish I knew you slept as hard and as long as I did last night. Try it please right away. We're stopping - I'd mail this where I don't know.
Hugs & kisses
and things
