Monday Eve

Sneaky Sweetie,

What're you doin' - heaping coals of fire on my head? I liked 'em tho! those two letters today, and they're helping lots. Tomorrow's the day I sum up all evidence, and present my resignation or no.
~~Hope I don't see a messenger~~ day all day - 'cause I'm giving Danny till noon to absorb my telegram, and say no if he wants to resign - Also I hope to hear again from mother. I wish she'd feel better about it all. Mother and I always did look at things differently, but mother always gives in, and then thinks me selfish.

Today the students of T.H.S. presented Cross and me each with a pretty little watch fab as an appreciation for our interest in athletics. I was certainly impressed with the spirit of the whole thing. and take back all the hard things ~~they~~^{I've} said about them. Hate to have to tell em good-bye in a very short time.

Dilworth has written several letters for a new teacher and as soon as I say the word he'll rush out here. I leave as soon as "it" comes. Ought to know exactly when that is.

Soo - night Sweety. These days are sure full of thought and you're there more than ever before. my Sweetheart.
