Noon - Wednesday.

Hello Tommie-

When I opened the box to crowd in the knife,- huly gee - there was no crowd. No little mice were in the box, just the seller got stingy and I sorry, Tommie.

So you are in the trenches now, getting fun out of it and from the most unexpected places. But anyway get some sleep, and cause Tommie you looked wawful that other Saturday night. Don't look that way again, will yuh?

This week is making up for the lull in mail, and it's great! All of it will help out while I know that I can't be expecting a phone call from you. Had the best letter from Elsie Farrar too yesterday, and she asked if I had seen Bob. When I stop to think that I haven't, seems peculiar to explain,- but I haven't and I shall tell her it's the irony of fate.

Isn't it exciting, Tommie, to think that maybe so soon you will go into S A E. I'll be wanting to hear your decision as soon as you know. And Sunday too sounds like a thriller, and I want more details about thattoo,- and I heard you say dance.

Now I'm gonna run along to the post-office, and then for my ten-cent lunch. It's good too. So long, Trench-Man, giving to you everything what are out of place and remain unserved in trench life - but anyway I'll think em on to you.

Sneaky.

So many of the fellows have gone from the SAE House ^{in Reno}, that maybe you'd get more out of it here. Anyway, you & Bob will know.
